

Prepare one set of Bible Book Cards for each group of three students.

Give each student a copy of “The Bible—A Library of Smaller Books” to use in this game. As students play their cards, ask them to say aloud the names of the Bible books and the divisions to which they belong.

Divide class into groups of three. Give each group a set of Bible Book Cards to spread out facedown on floor or table. Students each choose 12 cards. From the remaining cards, one card is placed faceup. First player determines if he or she has a card from the same division of the Bible as the face-up card. If so, the player places the card at one end of the face-up card, as in the game of Dominoes. If player does not have a card from the same division of the Bible, he or she takes one card from the remaining cards and plays it if possible. Next player takes a turn. When all books from a division have been played, the player who played the last card starts a new division. (The single-division books of Acts and Revelation are considered wild cards and may be played at any time.) Game continues until one student has played all his or her cards. Collect and shuffle cards to play game again.
